Kenya's International Airports received a $26.7 million technology upgrade
December 4, 2009

In order to increase capacity and facilitate travel for customers during peak hours, Kenya Airports Authority (KAA) will install self-service kiosks in Moi International Airport (MIA), in Mombasa, and Jomo Kenyatta International Airport (JKIA), in Nairobi.

SITA, a worldwide company focused on air transportation communication and IT solutions, signed a $26.7 million contract with KAA over the period of 10 years to upgrade passenger "processing services" in both airports.

"Working with SITA we are introducing world-leading technology that will provide the best service for both the airlines and passengers using these airports. This technology will also be available at the new Terminal Four in Nairobi when it opens," KAA Managing Director George Muoho said in a statement.

A total of 32 kiosks will be installed in JKIA and 16 in MIA. Another $349 million are said to be invested by KAA on modernizing the major airports around the country.
